Narrative:

On 2007/09/23, German Chancellor Angela Merkel received the Dalai Lama in Berlin.¹ Prior to the meeting, China protested the planned visit, summoning the German ambassador on 2007/09/14.²

On 2007/09/24, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Jiang Yu told reporters that the meeting “seriously undermine[d] China-Germany relations.”³ Two high-level meetings were canceled in response to the visit: a traditional breakfast to be had between Foreign Ministers at the UN General Assembly in New York, as well as upcoming talks on the rule of law in Munich.⁴

On 2008/06/13, foreign policy dialogue resumed following months of effort by the German government.^{5 6}
